

Snapshot of the MONTH

These baby barn swallows are taking a rest after their first flight out of the nest. It was a tiring practice flight before leaving the nest and the safety of the barn on the small farm of Tom and Dolores Karns of Laura. "There were seven nests in the barn walkway, so we had to duck the very protective mother swallows when we went in to feed the other animals," write Mr. and Mrs. Karns. "We left the barn doors open so the mother birds could get in to feed their babies. They're gone now, of course, but we look forward to their return next year."
